Not illustrated. 1864 edition. Excerpt: ...would close to platoon distance from the first; the interior platoons of this division would then form the reserve. A column arranged to form square will march and change direction like a column at half distance, only this will always be by wheeling, the guide being in every case indicated on the opposite side, if he is not already there. A battalion in square will never execute the firings otherwise than in two ranks. The color-guard will not fall back: it will join in firing with the company. The subdivision which doubles on the first front will remain at shouldered arms during the firing. 7. Square in four ranks. The battalion being in column by company at full distance and right in front, its colonel commands., 1. To form square in four ranks. 2. To half distance close column. 3. March. This movement consists in making all the even companies to double on the odd companies, in such manner that the file-closers of the odd companies may be placed one foot behind the even, with those of the even companies; except those of the seventh and eighth, who pass before the front rank of the seventh; so that the five ranks shall have but the distance of rank; while there shall be platoon distance between the subdivisions, from front rank to front rank, with the exception of the second subdivision, which will take the distance from its front rank to the fourth rank of the first. All the captains of odd companies will place themselves in front of the centre, and those of even companies behind the centre, with the exception of the captain of the eighth, who places himself in front, alongside the captain of the seventh. All the companies are arranged between their guides. The subdivisions thus doubled will be commanded by the captains placed in...
